Most people think that the amount of mercury present in dental fillings is not harmful for the human body. The fact is that no amount of mercury should be considered as harmless. Mercury tends to accumulate in the body and results in long term exposure and toxicity. A large amalgam filling contains almost as much mercury as a thermometer. Mercury is also released in vapor form from old fillings, which is quickly absorbed into the blood stream.

What are the harmful effects of Silver Amalgam Fillings?

The most dangerous constituent of an amalgam filling is mercury. Adverse effects of mercury on health are usually not taken seriously because mercury toxicity does not develop instantaneously, and may take up to many years to manifest.

Mercury in amalgam fillings tends to target the immune, nervous, digestive and the respiratory systems. Mercury exposure from dental fillings has been linked to various serious medical conditions, such as:

What should you do?

The first thing you should do is to say no to amalgam fillings from right now! If you have any pre-existing amalgam fillings in your mouth, you should get them checked for possible leakage, and if so, have them removed at the earliest possibility, in order to prevent yourself from the long term harmful effects of mercury. Getting your old amalgam fillings removed can also be very dangerous, as the mercury vapors emitted during amalgam removal are absorbed directly into the bloodstream. Therefore, it is important that you should visit an experienced holistic dentist, who knows the correct method of removing amalgam fillings while at the same time, not causing any harm to you.

Dr. Candida Castillo is an experienced dentist at the Aesthetic Dental Studio. Being a holistic dentist herself, Dr. Castillo strongly believes in restricting the use of mercury containing amalgam as a filling material due to its harmful effects on human health. If you have any amalgam fillings in your mouth, you should visit Dr. Castillo today and get rid of this poison in your teeth. Dr. Castillo utilizes a specialized technique for removal of amalgam fillings so that you don't inhale or ingest mercury vapor during the procedure.
